PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

To see the value of a Penn College education, one needs to look no further than Penn College students.

Whether it be in sports, ROTC or beautifying our community, innovative students have taken their collegiate lessons and, in true Penn College spirit, applied them to hands-on challenges. The results are impressive: testing new manufacturing materials, besting collegiate competitors, brightening children's smiles.

Students are the reason we are here. Penn College students are smart, capable and motivated. Throughout their educational process, they demonstrate the worth of our work. They reassure us that our mission, our vision and our values are in the right place.

It is an honor and a privilege for everyone who works at Penn College to play some small part in the development of these students as they go out into the workforce.

I'm sure you'll agree, as you read this Annual Report, that 2015-16 was a year of challenges and opportunities, but most of all, it was a year of student success.

Donations

Penn College and the Penn College Foundation received in-kind donations of equipment, technology, materials and supplies from business and industry for instructional purposes valued at $826,532 and cash donations totaling $2,079,600, for total donations of $2,906,132. In addition, $671,323 worth of equipment was entrusted to the college.

Students host event at community center

Eighteen Penn College students in the Service Learning in Sociology course sponsored a free community day at Firetree Place in Williamsport. The four-hour event featured arts and crafts, music, food, face-painting, games, and appearances by Penn College's dance team, men's and women's basketball teams, and the Wildcat mascot.

"The SOC410 students begin their semester with a sociological evaluation of our local community and identify a significant sociocultural challenge," said the students' instructor, D. Robert Cooley, assistant professor of anthropology/environmental science. "Then, they establish a partnership with a local human service organization and develop a semesterlong service-learning project to address this problem in a way that meets the needs of the client, the community, and also allows the students to apply the specialized skills they have learned in their classroom work."

College accepted to final year of NCAA provisional membership

Penn College is on track to be eligible for full membership in NCAA Division III beginning in Fall 2017. The NCAA Division III Management Council informed the college that it successfully completed its second year of provisional Division III membership and granted the college's request to bypass the third year and begin its final year of provisional membership in Fall 2016.

As a full member, the college would be eligible for national championships and would have voting rights on NCAA legislation.

Students test manufacturing material

Students representing the college's Plastics Innovation & Resource Center entered the student parts design competition at the 24th Annual Thermoforming Conference of the Society of Plastics Engineers in Atlanta.

For the competition, Jacob W. Fry and Madison T. Powell, both students in the plastics and polymer engineering technology major and research assistants for PIRC, used Sekisui SPI's Infused Imaging. The proprietary technology creates patterns or images in thermoplastic sheets.

Bloomsburg-based Sekisui SPI, a thermoplastic leader serving a range of industries, contacted the PIRC requesting that students work with its new, innovative technique in thermoforming. Thermoforming heats plastic sheet material and uses a vacuum to form products.

"The method enhances a part's design without the extra cost of machining a new tool or the challenges that traditional lamination or capping can bring," Powell said. "The new technology integrates design into the polymer."

Jacob W. Fry and Madison T. Powell, who received bachelor's degrees in plastics and polymer engineering technology in May, stand before parts they formed while testing a proprietary new technology by Sekisui SPI.

In addition, Vetock and Bird were honored as part of AIGA Blue Ridge's Flux Student Design competition, where their work was selected from among nearly 800 entries.

Fresh from the final lap of Baja SAE Rochester's last and most grueling event, the four-hour endurance race, the Penn College team celebrates its top-five finish.

Volunteer hours

Penn College student organizations completed 3,173.5 hours of community service and 2,695.5 hours of college service in the 2015-16 academic year, for a total of 5,869 hours.

Manufacturing students excel at international competition

A determined group of Penn College students enrolled in manufacturing-related majors proved to be among the best in the world at a high-powered international competition.

The nine-member contingent produced three top-five showings for individual events and finished 11th overall out of 98 collegiate teams at Baja SAE Rochester. The demanding Society of Automotive Engineers competition required students to design and build a single-seat, off-road vehicle to be inspected by industry judges and to survive various performance tests.

"I am very proud of these students. They worked so hard, and it was great to see their effort pay off against tough competition," said John G. Upcraft, instructor of automated manufacturing and machining and the team's adviser. "The students proved that they can beat teams from much larger schools."

Renowned speakers lead on-campus discussions

Audiences were moved by the words of renowned speakers in 2015-16. Among them were Nontombi Naomi Tutu, a human rights activist and daughter of Archbishop Desmond Tutu, who spoke during “Dream Week” in January. Award-winning author and environmental activist Rick Bass discussed the careful balance of environment and technology during a session of the Daniel J. Doyle Technology and Society Colloquia Series, and Lyn St. James, the Indianapolis 500’s first female Rookie of the Year, presented the keynote during the Antique Automobile Club of America’s Grand National Meet on campus.

Students take hands-on learning abroad

Students in the European Sustainable Building, Historical Architecture and Art class – accompanied by Naim N. Jabbour, assistant professor of architectural technology, and Daniel L. Brooks, instructor of architectural technology – made a nine-day, four-city educational tour of Italy, visiting Venice, Vicenza, Florence and Rome.

“Being able to see the ancient buildings in person, after studying them at Penn College, created an unforgettable experience for me,” said Timothy S. Shook, a May graduate in building science and sustainable design: architectural technology concentration.

Other classes making short-term study-abroad trips in 2015-16 were transportation technology students who ventured to France and Italy to study collision repair techniques; dental hygiene students visiting the Dominican Republic to provide dental care to school children; and students of Mathematics in Non-European Cultures, who traveled to Central America to study the mathematical systems of the Maya.

College hosts AACA Grand National Meet

The Penn College campus showcased 645 vehicles, with a total estimated value of roughly $50 million, during the Antique Automobile Club of America's 2016 Grand National Meet. The impressive vehicles were first-place winners of other AACA events. The meet – the AACA's largest thus far – was a joint project of the AACA Susquehannock Region and the Penn College Classic Cruisers student group.

New majors introduced

In Fall 2015, Penn College launched a bachelor's degree in business administration: sport and event management and a certificate and minor in innovation leadership, while legwork continued for a new associate degree in physical therapist assistant, which began accepting students in Fall 2016. Minors initiated for Fall 2016 are digital marketing, emergency management technology and financial counseling.

How I Work

Student's career choice hit him 'like a ton of bricks'

In the college's Construction Masonry Building, Anthony J. DiBucci stands among the material with which he'll make his mark.

by student Anthony J. DiBucci, residential construction technology and management: masonry concentration

I'm a college student.

Studying masonry. That's "how I work." When I'm asked what I'm majoring in at college, most people do not expect to hear the word "masonry" come out of my mouth. Half the time, I can't tell if they are surprised that I'm willing to bust my butt doing masonry work, or shocked that I am actually going to a college to learn the trade of becoming a skilled mason. Either way, that's just "how I work."

In high school, I really did not know what I wanted to do with my life. Did I want to go to school for business? Be an accountant? The Marine Corps was even an option at the time! I just did not know what to do. I chose to go to work for a year and use the opportunity to think about my future. For that year, I had the opportunity to work alongside my father and uncle doing concrete work. That year opened my eyes to the real world. It hit me like a ton of bricks, that's for sure.

The one job I recall quite vividly is a residential garage we built. We built a garage out of architectural split-face CMUs (concrete masonry units), and I had the opportunity to see exactly what was needed to construct a single-car garage on a plot of land where there had been nothing before. I did not have the opportunity to lay any block on the garage job, due to the fact that I was a laborer, but I know I touched every single block in the garage. That is when I realized that using your own two hands to build something is a skill. It also is an art, an art that is slowly diminishing. I had to learn more; I had to know it all. This trade is slowly dying, but it is not going to die on my watch!

I did my research, and I ended up finding a masonry program at Pennsylvania College of Technology. This program allowed me to learn the craft of masonry, both in the field and in the books. After I finish this two-year program in masonry, I will complete the bachelor's degree program, which will include coursework in management, supervision and safety within the construction industry. I have learned something every day since I have been here. My father tells me, "Be a sponge, Tone!" And I am. I am the largest of sponges, absorbing all of the information I hear every day in class.

"I realized that using your own two hands to build something is a skill. It also is an art."

A typical day at school starts at 8 a.m. Mondays start with a Construction Estimating course, where I learn everything that it takes to construct a house from the bottom up, including a pinpoint estimation of what it would cost to build that house. After this class, I'm ready to head to my Structural Masonry class that starts with theory. In theory, we discuss commercial construction work. The class moves right to the lab where all the "magic" happens. Our imaginations run wild to design there. Our floors are our pedestals, our pedestal to build our work of art upon. Our instructor for the project gives us specific guidelines, but he makes sure that we have a little bit of wiggle room for creativity. Every project is different; at times we work in teams, at times in pairs. Others are done solo. Being able to work collaboratively really gives me the opportunity to see how others work, along with learning how to work with others. You cannot do every job yourself. You cannot run a business by yourself. Being able to work with someone is half the battle. In my masonry class, I got the chance to learn how to work with others, as well as fine-tune my masonry skills. Some of my other coursework this semester includes a computer application course for construction, codes in construction, and a scheduling and management class.

I'm excited to be a part of the next generation of masons. I don't know where the industry might be in 10 years, but I know that the industry is evolving every day. I hear the talk of robots coming into our lives, replacing our jobs. Specifically, replacing my job as a mason! Yes, to an extent, robots are capable of doing what a basic mason can do. But when I say basic, I mean basic, non-intricate masonry projects that involve a repetitive succession of simplistic motions. No robot is going to be able to build you a genuine Rumford fireplace inside of your household. No robot is going to be able to individually chisel, trim, and meticulously lay stone on the exterior of your chimney. No robot is going to be able to make a multi-skew cut on a brick for your intricate Gothic archway. For as long as I may live, no robot is going to put me out of a job.

I know I'm in a field that will allow me to leave my presence on the world through projects I build. Masonry leaves a permanent mark, and if we want that mark to be filled with creativity and imagination, we must be knowledgeable in the field in which we work. The creation of a skilled mason's work will be there always as an enduring reminder of a human being's need to create and build. ■

According to the most recent Penn College Graduate Survey (2012-13), the starting salary for Residential Construction bachelor-degree graduates ranges from $30,000 to $50,000. The average full-time salary was $42,857. The survey had a response rate of 52.6 percent and was administered six months after graduation. Overall placement (field of study or preferred field) was 100 percent.

Nursing Education Center Dedicated

New facility brings latest technology to art of caring

Nursing student Rachelle N. Stevens learns about labor and delivery with SimMom, a programmable simulation manikin that gives birth to Birthing Baby.

by Jennifer A. Cline, writer/magazine editor

Hands-on learning in the Breuder Advanced Technology and Health Sciences Center took another step forward with the expansion of the college's Nursing Program.

The newly dedicated Nursing Education Center encapsulates the college's most distinct characteristics: hands-on learning, personal attention, and a readiness to adapt so that students master the skills most in demand by employers. In the modern health care field, nursing professionals use advanced education and technology to meet the demands of complex patient-care needs.

For years, nursing education took place on the second floor of the Advanced Technology and Health Sciences Center, where it shared the floor's west wing with four other academic programs in the college's School of Health Sciences.

With a shift down the stairs, the new Nursing Education Center occupies the entire first floor of the building's west wing. There, 10 dedicated classrooms and seven learning labs accommodate more than 350 students.

The expansion has allowed the college to accept more students into its nursing majors and to make room for additional hands-on experiences.

"The technology resources and highly qualified faculty we have to support student achievement parallel that of programs in larger cities like Philadelphia," said Sandra L. Richmond, director of nursing.

Among the technology available for student learning are five high-fidelity manikins, also called "patient simulators," which are programmable to imitate real health conditions, and 35 static manikins. A video and audio recording system allows nursing educators to run patient simulations and observe students from a remote location.

"Transitioning into the role of nurse and no longer student in and of itself is a huge learning curve," said Dallas J. Riley, a December 2015 graduate with a bachelor's degree in nursing. Now employed in the adult intensive care unit at Geisinger, she was among alumni who spoke at the dedication. "I thought that would be compounded when I joined the ranks of nurses at Geisinger, a world-renowned health care organization, in the ICU nonetheless. As it turns out, Penn College offers the same or similar equipment for students to practice on as I see now at work and as I saw in clinicals. Every opportunity is afforded students at this school to learn and master skills before practicing on real patients."

"Penn College offers the same ... equipment for students to practice on as I see now at work."

In compliance with the standards of the Accreditation Commission for Education in Nursing, all of the Penn College Nursing Program's full-time faculty hold master's degrees, and more than 25 percent of the faculty in its bachelor-degree majors hold doctorates.

Penn College offers four nursing degrees: an associate degree in health arts: practical nursing emphasis; an associate degree in nursing; a four-year bachelor's degree in nursing; and an online bachelor-degree completion major for those who already hold registered nurse licensure.

"I can't tell you the number of times nurses and other team members have told me how much they love Penn College grads," Riley said. "They say we are some of the best-prepared graduate nurses. Those of you who help us get there should be very proud. It all started here." ■

"We have watched with pride as these cadets have developed into leaders," said Carolyn R. Strickland, vice president for enrollment management/associate provost. "Through their leadership roles, they have impacted our campus and the lives of so many in such meaningful ways. We are grateful for their service."

Penn College is part of the Bison Battalion ROTC program, which includes Bucknell, Susquehanna and Bloomsburg universities and Lycoming College.

SOCIETY HONORS LEADERSHIP GIFTS

The 1914 Society celebrates individual donors who make an exceptional financial commitment to Pennsylvania College of Technology through annual gifts of $1,000 or more. Demonstrating the belief that dedicated individuals can make a difference in the lives of students, the Society brings together persons of leadership, ability, experience, and influence who support the College's mission.

Members enjoy exclusive communications from the president, an invitation to a signature annual event held in their honor, and advance notice of other special events happening at Penn College. They also receive the satisfaction of knowing they impact the lives of students who are pursuing degrees that work.
